

Project Delta Executive Summary

- Concise, constructive guidance for senior management and the team
- Covers Slack note, follow-up email, team communication, and resignation response

Slack Message Evaluation

- Resource allocation: note underutilisation vs. overload, and question external consultant need
- Timeline feasibility: recommend 7→11 months to protect quality and avoid burnout
- Decision-making: request more collaborative input for key decisions

Slack Tone and Framing

- Maintain respectful tone toward senior authority
- Frame all concerns as constructive proposals, not complaints
- Keep message concise and suitable for a Slack channel

Email Evaluation: Timeline Risk

- Seven months risks quality across four complex milestones
 - Specific issues: compressed research, development, integration testing
 - Consequences: more defects, lower customer trust, higher team stress

Email Evaluation: Collaborative Decisions

- Business value: better use of internal expertise, stronger ownership
- Team input reduces rework and improves milestone accuracy
- Formal tone, project-specific reasoning, clear persuasive structure

Team Communication Plan

- Channel/timing: schedule a team meeting with a follow-up summary
- Acknowledge effort and approved resource allocation win
- Present final decisions honestly and explain management rationale

Team Communication Content

- Praise team commitment, analyse the situation, provide feedback
- Reinforce shared commitment and next steps
- Use PAF-style structure: praise, analyse, feedback/action

Resignation Communication Principles

- Disclose promptly to avoid rumours
- Frame departure honestly without endorsing destabilising narratives
- Acknowledge valid concerns, then redirect energy to project goals

Resignation Communication Steps

- Explain when/how: quick team briefing and written follow-up
 - Describe fair reassignment of tasks and transparent rationale
 - Reinforce cohesion, role stability, and commitment to Project Delta

Summary and Next Steps

- Senior leadership: resource allocation accepted, emphasize why timeline and collaboration still matter
- Team: preserve morale, share decisions, highlight wins and path forward
- Resignation: remain factual, support continuity, strengthen trust
